

Questions to Ask the Interviewer

Once the employer has completed their portion of the interview, it is your turn. You should develop a list of questions to address those areas which still may be unclear so you have a full understanding of this position within the organization.

- How will this position fit into the organizational structure of the company or organization?
- How will I receive feedback about my performance and how often?
- Where can a position of this type lead to with this organization in five years?
- How did this position become available?
- What will the orientation and training entail? How much on-the-job training is involved?
- What are the long-term goals or growth plans of the organization?
- What type of continuing education or training does the organization provide?
- What are you looking for in the ideal candidate?
- What are some of the challenges this organization/department faces?
- What do you like about working here?
- At what level of day-to-day supervision will this position be under?
- Can you describe the day-to-day office environment or culture of this organization/department?

Source: Questions to Ask the Interviewer. (n.d.). Retrieved from <https://cms.ysu.edu/administrative-offices/career-services/questions-ask-interviewer>