

Readmit Students

Readmit students are defined as individuals who previously attended Concord University but have not attended another institution of higher education during their period of absence. Any undergraduate student who sits out one or more regular semesters (fall, spring) must apply for readmission to the University.

Transfer/Readmit students are defined as individuals who have attended another institution during their absence from Concord University. These individuals must list on their application for admission any/all previously attended colleges/universities. Failure to provide this information may constitute grounds for denial of admission or separation from Concord, should admission have been granted. Students must be in good academic and social standing to return to the University.

Readmitted students may not be admitted if they are deficient twenty or more quality points. The quality point total is cumulative for all institutions of attendance, including Concord University. Students deficient twenty or more quality points may appeal for admission to the University. However, completing the appeal process is no guarantee of admission and/or funding. The Appeals Committee will review the application and required documentation in detail. The Committee will also review the total quality point deficit; specifically attempted credit hours versus earned credit hours. Individuals admitted through the appeals process are expected to follow the Committee's recommendations for academic and financial aid progression. Since policy acknowledges that students must academically progress in order to receive federal funding, students with quality point deficits may not be eligible for financial aid. Therefore, the same appeal process is utilized for awarding financial aid. Individuals who previously submitted appeals, but who failed to follow committee recommendations, will be considered out of compliance with the University's plan for improvement. As a result, any future appeals may be negatively impacted or denied immediately upon submission.
